

The BAT Shop

meet the artisans—

Since 1995, the BAT Shop has focused on product development, marketing and sales of high quality crafts made in South Africa. Affiliated with the art development and community center in Durban, the BAT Shop works with many different producers in rural and urban settings who produce telephone wire bowls, bangles and mbenges (large wire plates designed as lids for large woven beer baskets) as well as traditional crafts. To meet the growing demand, the BAT Shop engaged a local wire manufacturer to augment the recycled telephone wire and increase the color palette.

BAT Shop products have graced the walls of the girls school Oprah opened in South Africa as well as the wrists of Diane von Furstenberg models on the runway during Fashion Week.

The sale of these fair trade goods helps provide a sustainable livelihood for the craftspeople and enables them to support their families and communities.

Partners in Fair Trade

The BAT Shop

meet the artisans—

Since 1995, the BAT Shop has focused on product development, marketing and sales of high quality crafts made in South Africa. Affiliated with the art development and community center in Durban, the BAT Shop works with many different producers in rural and urban settings who produce telephone wire bowls, bangles and mbenges (large wire plates designed as lids for large woven beer baskets) as well as traditional crafts. To meet the growing demand, the BAT Shop engaged a local wire manufacturer to augment the recycled telephone wire and increase the color palette.

BAT Shop products have graced the walls of the girls school Oprah opened in South Africa as well as the wrists of Diane von Furstenberg models on the runway during Fashion Week.

The sale of these fair trade goods helps provide a sustainable livelihood for the craftspeople and enables them to support their families and communities.

Partners in Fair Trade